Saint James School celebrates career day

RED BANK — Achieving a college education and loving the field you choose. Approximately 20 successful professionals recently visited the St. James middle school sixth- and eighth-grades to participate in Career Day 2013, an event designed to enlighten the students about the possibilities for their futures.

The event exposed the students to a variety of career fields and professions. An event like this, which educates students about future opportunities, can clarify a student's mind and help motivate them to work hard toward a goal or career they are passionate about.

The thread that ran through the presentations stressed achieving a college education and loving the field you choose. Some of the professions represented were the food industry, FBI and law enforcement, broadcast journalism, legal profession, merchandising and design, crime scene investigation and forensics, business owners, national park services and park rangers, the medical field and computer science technology.

The Parents Association Career Day Committee, under the leadership of Kim and Patrick Cottell, created what turned out to be an outstanding career day.
